Learning styles in research work – learn and work efficiently:

We all learn and work in highly individual ways, but often we do not know what is best for us, we are unaware of our strengths and preferences. For better or for worse, we usually do what we always have done and, not least, what tradition dictates. This part of the course introduces the concept of learning styles and offers ideas of how to utilize your learning strengths in your daily work. You will be offered an on-line learning styles profile to take before (and, if needed, also after) the course.

Experiences on the Work with Multilevel Sources as a PhD fellow

This lecture will be a discussion of the challenges encountered when working with multiple sources. It will also investigate the challenges of the writing process and a balanced PhD life.

This lecture is focusing on the use of legal sources in research – and the challenges of different levels of regulation as well as the application of non-legal sources.

In this lecture Lærke will share her experiences on these matters and she will invite for an open discussion on challenges and ways of coping with them. In her PhD thesis Lærke researches into a multi-level governance system on a national, EU and international level. The thesis deals with environmental protective regulation of agriculture in a social study of the law and applies relevant systems theory on social and ecological systems.

The research also includes non-legal sources such as political agreements and ministerial covers as well as bio scientific research.

References to the book by Ulla Neergaard and Ruth Nielsen (eds.) “European Legal Method – in a Multi-level EU Legal Order”, DJØF Publishing 2012, are included in the presentation.
